WITH QUANTRELL'S MEN

LIFE OF A GUERRILLA AS TOLD BY ONE OF THEM.

He Is Now a Respected Citizen of New York, but During the Civil War There Was a Price Upon His Hend.

From the New York Sun.
Living in a New York apartment house above Central park is a man on whose head above Centra was once placed a price by a Union general, In the country where this man made his self feared by those who were opposed to his manner of warfare he was known as a guerrilla. In the coinage of the civilian e was a bushwhacker.
"Naturally," he said to the only man in the city who knows his antecedents, "I was very much interested in the accounts I read the fighting around Guantanamo bay. I cannot say I wanted to take a hand. I made out of marines or regulars. I am not questioning the courage of either. That has been demonstrated. If I were asked to make a guess, it would be that the volunteer will be more effective in the guerrilla warfare in Cuba than the marine or the regular. And I believe the hard fighting is to come. When we have Santiago and Havana and all the coast towns the guerrilla war will e stubborn. It's like fire in cotton. You never know when it is going to break out, or where. The Spaniard is a guerrilla by instinct and the military customs of h country have intensified his craving. The "Best" Guerrilla.

"And yet the best guerrillas of the civil war-you understand the sense in which I use the word 'best'-were men whose lives I use the word 'best'—were men whose lives before the war were as peaceful as that of a pastoral poet. I cannot recall one who was a city man, or a commercial man, or what you would call an aggressive man. They were men who were known as countrymen. But they had some of the instincts of the tiger. A tiger is peaceful until his right is disputed. The blood of his wheip infuriates him.

"Some of the most desperate men in guerrilla warfare were those who tried to stay at home during the civil war to care for helpless ones, or who, having gone to the helpless ones, or who, having gone to the front, returned from time to time to look after their homes. Sometimes they found ashes where their homes stood. The people of the home were not to be found, or, if found, they were naked and hungry, and now and then one would be found whose reason was overthrown. Then the returned soldler lay in wait in the woods. He skulked by night. When the weather permitted he lay down to sleep in the day in the tall grass of the prairie. After he had lived in this way a little while, after he had comforted his feelings of revenge by the results of some unerring shots, and would have been willing to call it even, he found that he was proscribed. He knew he front, returned from time to time to lool would have been willing to call it even, he found that he was proscribed. He knew he was hunted. He knew that whatever he had of kin, wherever it was found, would be made to suffer for his sake. And he knew, God help him, that he had no country and no flag. And then he fought to the death.

'Now, when you find a dozen, twenty-five, fifty or 100 men whose lives have com together in this way you can understand how they came to be terrors. You can understand the portent of the black flag. There is no mounting of guard or dress parade or hope of reward from congress or of degrees by colleges or of florid descriptions of the fight, with pictures, for men who are guerrillas. Two stand sentinel somewhere in the thicket while the others get a little sleep, and sometimes there is no sentinel but the guerrilla's faithful horse. I have heard that a horse has no sense, but I think very much depends upon the man who owns him. I never stopped to study it, but there was some sort of affinity between a guerrilla and his horse. I have sleept in my saddle and trusted my faithful horse to keep out of danger. I have sometimes, when alone and itred, dismounted, lay down in the grass or thicket and left my horse on guard. I always found him there when I awoke.

"Yes, once my horse called me. I had been in the saddle nearly thirty hours. In that time the rain was incessant. I went to sleep under some branches on the ground. Under such conditions a man will sleep the sleep of the just. I was awakened by the shaking and breaking of the brush. together in this way you can understand ground. Under such conditions a man will sleep the sleep of the just. I was awakened by the shaking and breaking of the brush. My horse was pulling it from me. I was barely in the saddle when a lot of jay-hawkers were upon me. But for my knowledge of the country I would not have escaped. I think I owe my life to my horse.

An Unpardonable Crime. "With us, to be a Kansas man was th unpardonable crime. It sounds strange loesn't it? There was reason for it. Our doesn't it? There was reason for it. Our homes were on the border. We believed and some of us still believe, that the first horse stealing, the first barn burning, the first stampede of live stock and the first desceration of home and church were by the Kansas jayhawker, or, as he was often known, redieg. But there were times when his Kansas antecedents didn't cause him to die. A lieutenant was brought into our corral. He made some sort of sign which I did not understand, but our captain asked him if he were a Mason. The lieutenant answered affirmatively.

"'Aren't you a Kansas man?' asked our captain.

capiain.

"Yes.' was the reply.

"Then to hell with you,' said our captain. And while he cocked his pistol tears came into the lieutenant's eyes.

"How old are you?" asked our captain.

"The lieutenant was choked, but managed to say he was 26.

"'Married?' asked the captain. The lieutenant said he was.

"Yes."

"Hate to die, I reckon?" But the lieutenant was speechless.

"You are free. Git."

"The lieutenant was dumb, but as soon as he recovered he undertook to thank the man whose voice and heart were at war.

"Damn your thanks, and damn you" roared the captain. I told you you are free. Git."

"All Killed but One."

"I remember once when a troop that had been separated from the main body, if I can speak of a guerrilia band in that way been separated from the main body, if I can speak of a guerrilia band in that way, came in, and the lieutenant was questioned by Quantrell as to the result of his work. The guerrilia's report was never written, and the words were as brief and to the point as Dewey's to Gridley. The lieutenant's report was:

"'All killed but one.'

"It should be all killed, none wounded,' said Quantrell. 'Let it be so hereafter.'

"The lieutenant saluted and rode away. In answer to the question, "What made a guerrilia of Quantrell?' the old man answered promptly and in a quiet manner:

"It was in 1856. He and his brother and the father had camped in their overland journey. They were teaming. It was in the troubled days of Missouri-Kansas affairs. Jennison's men were prowling like wolves. They came upon this camp, and, without warning, killed the father, wounded the brothers, robbed them and rode sway. The Quantrell known afterwards in history dragged the body of his brother to a creek, washed his wounds, fed him, kept watch of him until he died, and then buried him, helped by an old Indian, who happened to come along, and who carried the living Quantrell to Leavenworth. There he recovered slowly. When he was well enough he taught school, got a little money and paid the old Indian who had helped him and who had brought him to town. Leavenworth at that time was the head-quarters of the jayhawkers. Quantrell enlisted in a company. The company had in it the men who had killed his father and brother. Quantrell was so changed that they did not know him. One by one they were found dead, all shot in the same brother. Quantrell was so changed that they did not know him. One by one they were found dead, all shot in the same place—in the forehead. After that Quan-trell pulled off the uniform of the Union. Jim Lane put a price on his head. Then Quantrell became a guerrilla.

Perhaps She's Changed Her Opinion Mother-"What did he say to you in his Mother—"What did he say to you in his letter, dear?"
Daughter—"Reminded me that I promised to wait for him till he came back from the war and not to go with any other young man while he was away."

Mother—"Of course you wrote him that you would be true to your promise?"
Daughter—"Well, yes: and I told him yery distinctly that I didn't think the war was being pushed along as it should be, at all."

CLIMATE OF ITALY. Best Times to Visit the Land of the Orange and the from Going Abroad. The spring and fall are undoubtedly the best times for Italy. The winters, to be sure, are nominally mild; snow is a rarity in Naples and seldom stays long in Rome, Florence or Venice, and the thermometer calls few days frigid. But the mercury calls few days frigid. But the mercury lies in Italy. When it registers 50 you suffer more than with it at 20 in Americanot in the sun, of course, but on the shady side of the street and indoors. It is the damp, penetrating chill, of the kind to which few Americans are accustomed. The houses are all of stone, designed to be cool in summer rather than warm in winter, and they are wretchedly heated. Steam heat is unknown; the occasional stove is a wretched failure, and most of the fire-places smoke. Wood is expensive and always charged for if burned in one's own room. Even with a biasing fire in the fire-place the chamber has a clearly defined, temperate and frigid zone. There is seldom any attempt to warm the mu-place the chamber has a clearly defined, torrid, temperate and frigid zone. There is seidom any attempt to warm the museums and galleries.

Do not, however, get the idea that Italy is unendurable in winter. It has charms at every season of the year, and its January is certainly more comfortable than a Boston or New York January. But it is not paradise.

The warmest parts of Italy visited by the ordinary tourist are two rivieras (shores), one commonly called the Riviera, running from Nice to Genoa, where lie Mentone, Monte Carlo, San Remo, etc.; the other, a still more beautiful coast on the sunny side of the rocky promontory that bounds the Bay of Naples on the south, of which Amalfi is the gem. The Riviera from Nice to Genoa is sheltered from cold north winds by the barrier of the Alps, is full in the face of the sun, and often does not see a snow storm for years. Semi-tropical plants grow freely, and the temperature is so mild that many victims of lung troubles are sent there to convalesce or die. It has hotels innumerable, which are for the most part well filled during the first four months of the year. Queen Victoria usually goes there for some weeks in the early spring, and it abounds with royalty and nobility.
